This application of face or countenance, which seems to be of high antiquity, proceeded probably from the practice of turning away the face to express anger, displeasure and refusal; a practice still common, but probably universal among rude nations. The Sax. creacian, to creak, may be the same word, the letters transposed; as may the Sp. crear, to rustle, Gr. xpaxo, to comb, scrape, rake, and Russ. crik, a cry, krichu, to cry. W. creth and erec, constitution, temper; also a trembling or shivering with cold. Ir. croth or cruth, form, shape; crathainkin, to create, to prove, assert, maintain. From the Celtic then it appears that the L. creo is contracted by the loss of a and o. The Welsh has also cri, a cry, and criar, to cry, both deduced by Owen from cre; but ere is a contraction of ereu, to cry, or of eryd, a crying or whooping, or eryd, a shaking. In Welsh also cri signifies rough, raw, crude; which all unite in the root of cry, cradle, L. rudo, to bray. The primary sense of create and of ery is the same, to throw or drive out, to produce, to bring forth, precisely as in the Shemitic  $\text{רָעַע}$ . [This word is rarely used, and in the latter sense is improper.]

CREDENTIALS, n. plu. [Rarely or never used in the singular.]

That which gives credit; that which gives a title or claim to confidence; the warrant on which belief, credit or authority is claimed, among strangers; as the letters of commendation and power given by a government to an ambassador or envoy, which give him credit at a foreign court. So the power of working miracles given to the apostles may be considered as their credentials, authorizing them to propagate the gospel, and entitling them to credit.

CREDIBILITY, n. [Fr. credibilité, from L. credibilis.]

Credibility; the quality or state of a thing which renders it possible to be believed, or which admits belief, on rational principles; the quality or state of a thing which involves no contradiction, or absurdity. Credibility is less than certainty, and greater than possibility; indeed it is less than probability, but is nearly allied to it. [See Credible.]

CREDIBLE, a. [L. credibilis.] That may be believed; worthy of credit. A thing is credible, when it is known to be possible, or when it involves no contradiction or absurdity; it is more credible, when it is known to come within the ordinary laws or operations of nature. With regard to the Divine Being and his operations, every thing is credible which is consistent with his perfections, and supported by evidence; or unimpeachable testimony, for his power is unlimited. With regard to human affairs, we do not apply the word to things barely possible, but to things which come within the usual course of human conduct, and the general rules of evidence.

2. Worthy of belief; having a claim to credit; applied to persons. A credible person is one of known veracity and integrity, or whose veracity may be fairly deduced from circumstances. We believe the history of Aristides and Themistocles, on the authority of credible historians.

CREDIBLENESS, n. Credibility; worthiness of belief; just claim to credit. [See Credibility.]

CREDIBLY, adv. In a manner that deserves belief; with good authority to support belief.

CREDIT, n. [Fr. credit; It. credito; Sp. id.; L. credium. See Cred.]

1. Belief; faith; a reliance or resting of the mind on the truth of something said or done. We give credit to a man's declaration, when the mind rests on the truth of it, without doubt or suspicion, which is attended with wavering. We give credit to testimony or to a report, when we rely on its truth and certainty.

2. Reputation derived from the confidence of others. Esteem; estimation; good opinion founded on a belief of a man's veracity, integrity, abilities and virtue; as a physician in high credit with his brethren. Hence,

3. Honor; reputation; estimation; applied to men or things. A man gains no credit by profaneness; and a poem may lose credit by criticism. The credit of a man depends on his virtues; the credit of his writings, on their worth.

4. That which procures or is entitled to belief; testimony; authority derived from one's character, or from the confidence of others. We believe a story on the credit of the narrator. We believe in miracles on the credit of inspired men. We trust to the credit of an assertion, made by a man of known veracity.

5. Influence derived from the reputation of veracity or integrity, or from the good opinion or confidence of others; interest; power derived from weight of character, from friendship, fidelity or other cause. A minister may have great credit with a prince. He may employ his credit to good or evil purposes. A man uses his credit with a friend; a servant, with his master.

6. In commerce, trust; transfer of goods in confidence of future payment. When the merchant gives a credit, he sells his wares on an expressed or implied promise that the purchaser will pay for them at a future time. The seller believes in the solvability and probity of the purchaser, and delivers his goods on that belief or trust; or he delivers them on the credit or reputation of the purchaser. The purchaser takes what is sold, on credit. In like manner, money is loaned on the credit of the borrower.

7. The capacity of being trusted; or the reputation of solvency and probity which entitles a man to be trusted. A customer has good credit or no credit with a merchant.

8. In book-keeping, the side of an account in which payment is entered; opposed to debit. This article is carried to one's credit, and that to his debit. We speak of the credit side of an account.

9. Public credit, the confidence which men entertain in the ability and disposition of a nation, to make good its engagements with its creditors; or the estimation in which individuals hold the public promises of payment, whether such promises are expressed or implied. The term is also applied to the general credit of individuals in a nation; when merchants and others are wealthy, and punctual in fulfilling engagements; or when they transact business with honor and fidelity; or when transfers of property are made with ease for ready payment. So we speak of the credit of a bank, when general confidence is placed in its ability to redeem its notes; and the credit of a mercantile house rests on its supposed ability and probity, which induce men to trust to its engagements.

Cherish public credit.
When the public credit is questionable, it raises the premium on loans.

10. The notes or bills which are issued by the public or by corporations or individuals, which circulate on the confidence of men in the ability and disposition in those who issue them, to redeem them. They are sometimes called bills of credit.

11. The time given for payment for lands or goods sold on trust; as a long credit, or a short credit.

12. A sum of money due to any person; any thing valuable standing on the creditor side of an account. A has a credit on the books of B. The credits are more than balanced by the debits.

[In this sense the word has the plural number.]

CREDIT, v. t. [from the Noun.] To believe; to confide in the truth of; as, to credit a report, or the man who tells it.

2. To trust; to sell or loan in confidence of future payment; as, to credit goods or money.

CRIME, n. [L. crimina; G. κριμα; It. crime; Port. crime; Sp. crimen; Fr. crime; Arm. crim; Norm. crimis.] This word is from the root of Gr. κρινω, L. cerno, to separate, to judge, to decree, to condemn. But this verb seems to be composed of two distinct roots, for in Latin, the pret. is crevi, which cannot be formed from cerno; and in Greek, the derivatives, κριμα, κρισις, κριτής, cannot be regularly formed from κρινω. The Gr. κριμα is undoubtedly a contraction, for in Norman the word is crime. The root then of these derivatives is the same as of the Ir. criathar, a sieve, W. rhydylh, Eng. riddle; W. rhidiaw, to secrete, to separate.

We have sercen, a riddle, from the root of κριμα, and riddle, from the Celtic root of κριμα, κριτης.

To judge is to decide, to separate or cut off; hence to condemn; a crime is that which is condemned.]

1. An act which violates a law, divine or human; an act which violates a rule of moral duty; an offense against the laws of right, prescribed by God or man, or against any rule of duty plainly implied in those laws. A crime may consist in omission or neglect, as well as in commission, or positive transgression. The commander of a fortress who suffers the enemy to take possession by neglect, is as really criminal, as one who voluntarily opens the gates without resistance.

But in a more common and restricted sense, a crime denotes an offense, or violation of public law, of a deeper and more atrocious nature; a public wrong; or a violation of the commands of God, and the offenses against the laws made to preserve the public rights; as treason, murder, robbery, theft, arson, &c. The minor wrongs committed against individuals or private rights, are denominated trespasses, and the minor wrongs against public rights are called misdeemeanors. Crimes and misdemeanors are punishable by indictment, information or public prosecution; trespasses or private injuries, at the suit of the individuals injured. But in many cases an act is considered both as a public offense and a trespass, and is punishable both by the public and the individual injured.

CRY, v. i. pret. and pp. cried. It ought to be cryed. [Fr. crier. The Welsh has cri, a cry, and rough, raw, criaw, to cry, clamor or weep; and creu, to cry, to crave; both deduced by Owen from cre, a combining cause, a principle, beginning or first motion; also, what pervades or penetrates, a cry. This is the root of create, or from the same root. Cre, Owen deduces from rhe, with the prefix ey; and rhe, he renders a run or swift motion. This is certainly contracted from rhed, a race, the root of ride; Owen to the contrary notwithstanding. All the senses of these words unite in that of shooting forth, driving forward or producing. There is a class of words a little different from the foregoing, which exactly give the sense of cry. It. gridare; Sp. and Port. griter; Sax. greden; Sw. grifva; Dan. græder; D. kryten; W. grydiau, to utter a rough sound, from rhyd, the Welsh root of crydu, to shake or tremble, whence cradle. [W. creth, a trembling or shivering with cold, from cre; also, constitution, disposition.] The latter root rhyd, crydu, would give cri, rough, raw, criaw. Cry is a contracted word; but whether from the former or latter class of roots, may be less obvious—possibly all are from one source. If not, I think cry is from the French crier, and this from gridare, gritar.]

This word coincides in elements with the W. cat, a piece, catia, to cut, cuta, short, cutau, to shorten, and with ysgythru, to cut off, to lop, to shred, to carve, which Owen deduces from ysgyeth, a push, from gyeth, a push or thrust, gyeth-ine, to push, thrust, press. Whether cut is derived to us from the Welsh or not may be a question; but I have not found the word in any of the Gothic or Teutonic languages. It is obviously from a common root with the L. cado and cado, and the primary sense is to thrust, to drive, to strike; and to cut is primarily to strike off. We have proof of this in our own language; for a stroke with a whip is called a cut, and our common people, when they urge a person to ride or run with haste, cry out, cut on, cut on. The fact is the same with many other words which now signify, to separate with an edged tool. See Class Gd. No. 2. 4. 8. 43. 49. 56. 59. and in a different dialect, Class Gs. I place little confidence in these conjectures.]

 A spirit, or immaterial being, holding a middle place between men and the celestial deities of the Pagans. The ancients believed that there were good and evil demons, which had influence over the minds of men, and that these beings carried on an intercourse between men and gods, conveying the addresses of men to the gods, and divine benefits to men. Hence demons became the objects of worship. It was supposed also that human spirits, after their departure from the body, became demons, and that the souls of virtuous men, if highly purified, were exalted from demons into gods. In the scriptures, the English word is not used, but the Greek δαίμων is rendered devil, and sometimes at least improperly; for nothing is more certain than that different beings are intended by δαίμων and δαίμων. The demons of the New Testament were supposed to be spiritual beings which vexed and tormented men. And in general, the word, in modern use, signifies an evil spir-

DRAGON, n. [L. draco; Gr. δρακων; It. dragone; Fr. dragon; D. draak; G. drache; It. draic or draig; W. draig; Sw. drake; Dan. drage. The origin of this word is not obvious. In Ir. drag is fire; in W. dragon is a leader, chief or sovereign, from dragiau, to draw. In Scotch, the word signifies a paper kite, as also in Danish; probably from the notion of flying or shooting along, like a fiery meteor. In Welsh, draig is rendered by Owen a procreator or generating principle, a fiery serpent, a dragon, and the Supreme; and the plural dreigiau, silent lightnings, dreigiau, to lighten silently. Hence I infer that the word originally signified a shooting meteor in the atmosphere, a fiery meteor, and hence a fiery or flying serpent, from a root which signified to shoot or draw out.]

E.

E, the second vowel and the fifth letter of the English Alphabet, seems to be the ancient Phœnician and Hebrew ע inverted, corresponding nearly with the Chaldaic and later Hebrew א. Its long and natural sound in English coincides with the sound of i in the Italian and French languages, and is formed by a narrower opening of the glottis than that of a. It has a long sound, as in here, mere, me; a short sound, as in met, men; and the sound of a open or long, in there, prey, vein. As a final letter, it is generally quiescent; but it serves to lengthen the sound of the preceding vowel, or at least to indicate that the preceding vowel is to have its long sound, as in mane, cane, plume, which, without the final e, would be pronounced man, can, plum. After c and g, the final e serves to change these letters from hard to soft, or to indicate that e is to be pronounced as e, and g, as j. Thus without the final e, in mae, [maise,] this word would be pronounced mae [mak,] and rage [raj] would be pronounced rag. In a numerous class of words, indeed in almost every word, except a few from the Greek, the final e is silent, serving no purpose whatever, unless to show from what language we have received the words, and in many cases, it does not answer this purpose. As words ending in ve, as active; in ile, as fatile; in ine, as in sanguine, examine; in ile as in definite; e is, for the most part, silent. In some of these words, the use of e is borrowed from the French; in most or all cases, it is not authorized by the Latin originals; it is worse than useless, as it leads to a wrong pronunciation; and the retaining of it in such words is, beyond measure, absurd.

When two of this vowel occur together, the sound is the same as that of the single e long, as in deem, esteem, need; and it occurs often with a and i, as in mean, hear, siege, deceive, in which cases, when one vowel only has a sound, the combination I call a digraph [double written.] In these combinations, the sound is usually that of e long, but sometimes the short sound of e, as in lead, a metal, read, pret. of read, and sometimes the sound of a long, as in rein, feign, pronounced raim, faim. Irregularities of this kind are not reducible to rules.

As a numeral, E stands for 250. In the calendar, it is the fifth of the dominical letters. As an abbreviation, it stands for East, as in charts; E. by S., East by South.

EACH, a. [Scot. eik. This word is either a contraction of the Sax. alc, ele, D. elk, or the Ir. each, or gach, Basque, gucia, Fr. chaque, with the loss of the first articulation. With the Celtic corresponds the Russ. kajdi, each. I am inclined to believe both the English and Scottish words to be contractions of the Celtic each.

Every one of any number separately considered or treated.

To all of them he gave each man changes of raiment. Gen. xlv.

And the princes of Israel, being twelve men, each one was for the house of his fathers. Num. i.

Simeon and Levi took each man his sword. Gen. xxxiv.

The emperor distributed to each soldier in his army a liberal donative.

To each corresponds other. Let each esteem other better than himself. It is our duty to assist each other; that is, it is our duty to assist, each to assist the other.

EAGER, a. [Fr. aigre; Arm. acer; W. egyr; It. agro; Sp. agrio; L. acer, fierce, brisk, sharp, sour. If r is radical, this word belongs to Class Gr. Ir. gear, geire, sharp; Ger. gier. Otherwise, it coincides with L. acus, Eng. edge, Sax. ecg.]

1. A rapacious fowl of the genus Falco. The beak is crooked and furnished with a cere at the base, and the tongue is cloven or bifid. There are several species, as the bald or white-headed eagle, the sea eagle or ossifrage, the golden eagle, &c.

The eagle is one of the largest species of fowls, has a keen sight, and preys on small animals, fish, &c. He lives to a great age; and it is said that one died at Vienna, after a confinement of a hundred and four years. On account of the elevation and rapidity of his flight, and of his great strength, he is called the king of birds. Hence the figure of an eagle was made the standard of the Romans, and a spread eagle is a principal figure in the arms of the United States of America. Hence also in heraldry, it is one of the most noble bearings in armory.

These nodules often embrace at the center a kernel or nucleus, sometimes movable, and always differing from the exterior in color, density and fracture. To these hollow nodules the ancients gave the name of eagle-stones, from an opinion that the eagle transported them to her nest to facilitate the laying of her eggs. Cleveland.

EARN, v. l. earn. [Sax. earnian, arnian, ge-arnian, to earn, to merit. It is connected in origin with earnest and yearn, which see. The primary sense is to strive or urge, implying an effort to advance or stretch forward.]

1. To merit or deserve by labor, or by any performance; to do that which entitles to a reward, whether the reward is received or not. Men often earn money or honor which they never receive.

Earn money before you spend it, and spend less than you earn.

2. To gain by labor, service or performance; to deserve and receive as compensation; as, to earn a dollar a day; to earn a good living; to earn honors or laurels.

EARNED, pp. ern'd. Merited by labor or performance; gained.

EARNEST, a. ern'est. [Sax. earnest, or geornest, from georn, desirous, studious, diligent, assiduous, whence geornian, gurnan, to desire, to yearn; Dan. gieerne, willingly, freely, gladly, cheerfully; giering, a deed, act, exploit; Ger. ernst; D. ernst; W. ern, earnest-money. The radical sense is to strive to advance, to reach forward, to urge, to strain.]

1. Ardent in the pursuit of an object; eager to obtain; having a longing desire; warmly engaged or incited.

They are never more earnest to disturb us, than when they see us most earnest in this duty. Duppa.

2. Ardent; warm; eager; zealous; animated; impetuous; as earnest in love; earnest in prayer.

3. Intent; fixed.

On that prospect strange

Their earnest eyes were fixed. Milton.

4. Serious; important; that is, really intent or engaged; whence the phrase, in earnest. To be in earnest, is to be really urging or stretching towards an object; intent on a pursuit. Hence, from fixed attention, comes the sense of seriousness in the pursuit, as opposed to trifling or jest. Are you in earnest or in jest?

EARNEST, n. ern'est. Seriousness; a reality; a real event; as opposed to jesting or feigned appearance.

Take heed that this jest do not one day turn to earnest. Sidney.

And given in earnest what I begg'd in jest. Shok.

2. First fruits; that which is in advance, and gives promise of something to come. Early fruit may be an earnest of fruit to follow. The first success in arms may be an earnest of future success. The Christian's peace of mind in this life is an earnest of future peace and happiness. Hence earnest or earnest-money is a first payment or deposit giving promise or assurance of full payment. Hence the practice of giving an earnest to ratify a bargain.

This sense of the word is primary, denoting that which goes before, or in advance. Thus the earnest of the spirit is given to saints, as a pledge or assurance of their future enjoyment of God's presence and favor.

EARNESTLY, adv. ern'estly. Warmly; zealously; importunately; eagerly; with real desire.

Being in an agony, he prayed more earnestly. Luke xxii.

That ye should earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints. Jude 3.

2. With fixed attention; with eagerness.

A certain maid looked earnestly upon him. Luke xxii.

EARNESTNESS, n. ern'estness. Ardor or zeal in the pursuit of any thing; eagerness; animated desire; as, to seek or ask with earnestness; to engage in a work with earnestness.

2. Anxious care; solicitude; intenseness of desire. Dryden.

3. Fixed desire or attention; seriousness; as, the charge was maintained with a show of gravity and earnestness.

EARNING, ppp. ern'ing. Meriting by services; gaining by labor or performance.

EARNING, n. ern'ing. plu. earnings. That which is earned; that which is gained or merited by labor, services or performance; wages; reward. The folly of young men is to spend their earnings in dissipation or extravagance. It is wise for the poor to invest their earnings in a productive fund.

EARSH, n. [See Ear, to plow.] A plowed field. [Not in use.] May.

EARTH, n. earth. [Sax. eorð, eorth, yrth; D. aarde; G. erde; Sw. iord, jord; Dan. iord; Scot. erd, yerd, yerth; Turk. jerdä; Tartaric. yirdä. It coincides with the Heb. אֶרֶץ.]

The Ar. أرض aratzä, from which the Arabic and Hebrew words corresponding to the Teutonic above, are derived, signifies to eat, gnaw or corrode as a worm, or the teredo. It is obvious then that the primary sense of earth is fine particles, like mold. The verb may be from אָרַץ to break or bruise. The Ch. and Syr. אֶרֶץ aratzä, may be contracted from the same word. See Corrode. It is by no means improbable that aro, to plow, may be contracted from the same root.]

1. Earth, in its primary sense, signifies the particles which compose the mass of the globe, but more particularly the particles which form the fine mold on the surface of the globe; or it denotes any indefinite mass or portion of that matter. We throw up earth with a spade or plow; we fill a pit or ditch with earth; we form a rampart with earth. This substance being considered, by ancient philosophers, as simple, was called an element; and in popular language, we still hear of the four elements, fire, air, earth and water.

2. In chemistry, the term earth was, till lately, employed to denote a simple elementary body or substance, tasteless, inodorous, unflammable and infusible. But it has also been applied to substances which have a very sensible alkaline taste, as lime. The primitive earths are reckoned ten in number, viz., silica, alumina, lime, magnesia, baryte, strontiana, zircon, glucina, yttria and thoria. Recent experiments prove that most or all of them are compounds of oxygen with bases, some of which appear to possess the properties of metals. In this case the earths are to be considered as metallic oxides.

Davy. Silliman. Phillips.

3. The terraqueous globe which we inhabit. The earth is nearly spherical, but a little flattened at the poles, and hence its figure is called an oblate spheroid. It is one of the primary planets, revolving round the sun in an orbit which is between those of Venus and Mars. It is nearly eight thousand miles in diameter, and twenty five thousand miles in circumference. Its distance from the sun is about ninety five millions of miles, and its annual revolution constitutes the year of 365 days, 5 hours, and nearly 49 minutes.

In butter much salted, the salt shoots in spicule, and an efflorescence is often seen on walls formed with plaster. In some species of salts, as in sulphate and carbonate of soda, the efflorescence consists of a fine white dust. This kind of efflorescence is the contrary of deliquescence. In the United States, certain persons are appointed or chosen to be electors of the president or chief magistrate. In Germany, certain princes were formerly electors of the emperor, and elector was one of their titles, as the elector of Saxony.

ELECTORAL, a. Pertaining to election or electors. The electoral college in Germany consisted of all the electors of the empire, being nine in number, six secular princes and three archbishops.

ELECTORALTY, for electorate, is not used.

ELECTORATE, n. The dignity of an elector in the German empire.

2. The territory of an elector in the German empire.

ELECTRE, n. [L. electrum.] Amber. [Bacon used this word for a compound or mixed metal. But the word is not now used.]

ELECTRESS, n. The wife or widow of an elector in the German empire. Chesterfield.

ELECTRIC, } [Fr. electrique; It. elet-
ELECTRICAL, } a trico; Sp. electrico; from L. electrum, Gr. ηλεκτρον, amber.]

1. Containing electricity, or capable of exhibiting it when excited by friction; as an electric body, such as amber and glass; an electric substance.

2. In general, pertaining to electricity; as electric power or virtue; electric attraction or repulsion; electric fluid.

3. Derived from or produced by electricity; as electrical effects; electric vapor; electric shock.

4. Communicating a shock like electricity; as the electric eel or fish.

ELECTRIC, n. Any body or substance capable of exhibiting electricity by means of friction or otherwise, and of resisting the passage of it from one body to another. Hence an electric is called a non-conductor, an electric per se. Such are amber, glass, rosin, wax, gum-lac, sulphur, &c.

ELECTRICALLY, adv. In the manner of electricity, or by means of it.

ELECTRICIAN, n. A person who studies electricity, and investigates its properties, by observation and experiments; one versed in the science of electricity.

ELECTRICITY, n. The operations of a very subtil fluid, which appears to be diffused through most bodies, remarkable for the rapidity of its motion, and one of the most powerful agents in nature. The name is given to the operations of this fluid, and to the fluid itself. As it exists in bodies, it is denominated a property of those bodies, though it may be a distinct substance, invisible, intangible and imperceptible. When an electric body is rubbed with a soft dry substance, as with woolen cloth, silk or fur, it attracts or repels light substances, at a greater or less distance, according to the strength of the electric virtue; and the friction may be continued, or increased, till the electric body will emit sparks or flashes resembling fire, accompanied with a sharp sound. When the electric fluid passes from cloud to cloud, from the clouds to the earth, or from the earth to the clouds, it is called lightning, and produces thunder. Bodies which, when rubbed, exhibit this property, are called electrics or non-conductors. Bodies, which, when excited, do not exhibit this property, as water and metals, are called non-electrics or conductors, as they readily convey electricity from one body to another, at any distance, and such is the rapidity of the electric fluid in motion, that no perceptible space of time is required for its passage to any known distance. Cavallo. Encyc.

It is doubted by modern philosophers whether electricity is a fluid or material substance. Electricity, according to Professor Silliman, is a power which causes repulsion and attraction between the masses of bodies under its influence; a power which causes the heterogeneous particles of bodies to separate, thus producing chemical decomposition; one of the causes of magnetism.

ELECTRIFIABLE, a. [from electrify.] Capable of receiving electricity, or of being charged with it; that may become electric. Fourcroy.

2. Capable of receiving and transmitting the electrical fluid.

ELEGANCE, } [L. elegantia; Fr. élégance];
ELEGANCY, } n. gance; It. eleganza. Probably from L. elige, to choose, though irregularly formed.]

In its primary sense, this word signifies that which is choice or select, as distinguished from what is common.

- "The beauty of propriety, not of greatness," says Johnson.
Applied to manners or behavior, elegance is that fine polish, politeness or grace, which is acquired by a genteel education, and an association with wellbred company.
Applied to language, elegance respects the manner of speaking or of writing. Elegance of speaking is the propriety of diction and utterance, and the gracefulness of action or gesture; comprehending correct, appropriate and rich expressions, delivered in an agreeable manner. Elegance of composition consists in correct, appropriate and rich expressions, or well chosen words, arranged in a happy manner. Elegance implies neatness, purity, and correct, perspicuous arrangement, and is calculated to please a delicate taste, rather than to excite admiration or strong feeling. Elegance is applied also to form. Elegance in architecture, consists in the due symmetry and distribution of the parts of an edifice, or in regular proportions and arrangement. And in a similar sense, the word is applied to the person or human body. It is applied also to penmanship, denoting that form of letters which is most agreeable to the eye. In short, in a looser sense, it is applied to many works of art or nature remarkable for their beauty; as elegance of dress or furniture.
- That which pleases by its nicety, symmetry, purity or beauty. In this sense it has a plural; as the nicer elegancies of art. Spectator.

ELEGANT, a. [L. elegans.] Polished; polite; refined; graceful; pleasing to good taste; as elegant manners.

- Polished; neat; pure; rich in expressions; correct in arrangement; as an elegant style or composition.
- Uttering or delivering elegant language with propriety and grace; as an elegant speaker.
- Symmetrical; regular; well formed in its parts, proportions and distribution; as an elegant structure.
- Nice; sensible to beauty; discriminating beauty from deformity or imperfection; as an elegant taste. [This is a loose application of the word; elegant being used for delicate.]
- Beautiful in form and colors; pleasing; as an elegant flower.
- Rich; costly and ornamental; as elegant furniture or equipage.

ELEGANTLY, adv. In a manner to please; with elegance; with beauty; with pleasing propriety; as a composition elegantly written.

- With due symmetry; with well formed and duly proportioned parts; as a house elegantly built.
- Richly; with rich or handsome materials well disposed; as a room elegantly furnished; a woman elegantly dressed.

ELEGIAC, a. [Low L. elegiacus. See Elegy.] Belonging to elegy; plaintive; expressing sorrow or lamentation; as an elegiac lay; elegiac strains. Gay.

EL'E'GIT, n. [L. eligo, elegi, to choose.] A writ of execution, by which a defendant's goods are appraised, and delivered to the plaintiff, and if not sufficient to satisfy the debt, one moiety of his lands are delivered, to be held till the debt is paid by the rents and profits.

- The title to estate by elegit. Blackstone.

EL'E'GY, n. [L. elegia; Gr. ἐλεγίον, ἔλεγος, supposed to be from ἔλεος, to speak or utter. Qu. the root of the L. lugeo.] The verbs may have a common origin, for to speak and to cry out in wailing are only modifications of the same act, to throw out the voice with more or less vehemence.]

- A mournful or plaintive poem, or a funeral song; a poem or a song expressive of sorrow and lamentation. Shak. Dryden.
- A short poem without points or affected elegancies. Johnson.

EL'EMENT, n. [L. elementum; Fr. élément; It. and Sp. elemento; Arn. elfenn; W. elven, or elvez.] This word Owen refers to ele or el, a moving principle, that which has in itself the power of motion; and ed is also a spirit or angel, which seems to be the Sax. elf, an elf. Vossius assigns elementum to eleo, for oleo, to grow. See Elf.]

- The first or constituent principle or minute part of any thing; as the elements of earth, water, salt, or wood; the elements of the world; the elements of animal or vegetable bodies. So letters are called the elements of language.
- An ingredient; a constituent part of any composition.
- In a chemical sense, an atom; the minute particle of a substance; that which cannot be divided by chemical analysis, and therefore considered as a simple substance, as oxygen, hydrogen, nitrogen, &c.

An element is strictly the last result of chemical analysis; that which cannot be decomposed by any means now employed. An atom is the last result of mechanical division; that which cannot be any farther divided, without decomposition; hence there may be both elementary and compound atoms.

- In the plural, the first rules or principles of an art or science; rudiments; as the elements of geometry; the elements of music; the elements of painting; the elements of a theory.
- In popular language, fire, air, earth and water, are called the four elements, as formerly it was supposed that these are simple bodies, of which the world is composed. Later discoveries prove air, earth and water to be compound bodies, and fire to be only the extrication of light and heat during combustion.
- Element, in the singular, is sometimes used for the air. Shak.
- The substance which forms the natural or most suitable habitation of an animal. Water is the proper element of fishes; air, of man. Hence,
- The proper state or sphere of any thing; the state of things suited to one's temper or habits. Faction is the element of a demagogue.

This animal has no foreteeth in either jaw; the canine-teeth are very long; and he has a long proboscis or trunk, by which he conveys food and drink to his mouth. The largest of these animals is about 16 feet long and 14 feet high; but smaller varieties are not more than seven feet high. The eyes are small

In W. el is a moving principle, a spirit; ele is the same; elfu is to move onward, to go; elven is an operative cause, a constituent part, an element; and elf is what moves in a simple or pure state, a spirit or demon. From these facts, it would seem that elf is from a verb signifying to move, to flow; and älf or elf in Swedish, elf in Danish, is a river, whence Elbe. So spirit is from blowing, a flowing of air. In Saxon el is oil and an el, and

EQUATOR, n. [L. from æquo, to make equal.]

In astronomy and geography, a great circle of the sphere, equally distant from the two poles of the world, or having the same poles as the world. It is called æquator, because when the sun is in it, the days and nights are of equal length; hence it is called also the æquinoctial, and when drawn on maps, globes and planispheres, it is called the æquinoctial line, or simply the line. Every point in the equator is 90 degrees or a quadrant's distance from the poles; hence it divides the globe or sphere into two equal hemispheres, the northern and southern. At the meridian, the equator rises as much above the horizon as is the complement of the latitude of the place.

In astronomy, a great circle of the sphere, under which the equator moves in its diurnal course. This should not be confounded with the equator, as there is a difference between them; the equator being movable, and the equinoctial immovable; the equator being drawn about the convex surface of the sphere, and the equinoctial on the concave surface of the magnus orbis.

These words however are often confounded. When the sun, in its course through the ecliptic, comes to this circle, it makes equal days and nights in all parts of the globe. The equinoctial then is the circle which the sun describes, or appears to describe, at the time the days and nights are of equal length, viz. about the 21st of March and 23d of September.

Æquinoctial points, are the two points where in the equator and ecliptic intersect each other; the one, being in the first point of Aries, is called the vernal point or equinox; the other, in the first point of Libra, the autumnal point or equinox.

1. Properly, to dress; to habit. Hence, to furnish with arms, or a complete suit of arms, for military service. Thus we say, to equip men or troops for war; to equip a body of infantry or cavalry. Hence, to furnish with arms and warlike apparatus; as, to equip a regiment.

right to claim. It is the treating of a person according to justice and reason.

The Lord shall judge the people with equity. Ps. xviii.

With righteousness shall he judge the poor, and reproove with equity. Is. xi.

2. Justice; impartiality; a just regard to right or claim; as, we must, in equity, allow this claim.

3. In law, an equitable claim. "I consider the wife's equity to be too well settled to be shaken." Kent.

4. In jurisprudence, the correction or qualification of law, when too severe or defective; or the extension of the words of the law to cases not expressed, yet coming within the reason of the law. Hence a court of equity or chancery, is a court which corrects the operation of the literal text of the law, and supplies its defects, by reasonable construction, and by rules of proceeding and deciding, which are not admissible in a court of law. Equity then is the law of reason, exercised by the chancellor or judge, giving remedy in cases to which the courts of law are not competent. Blackstone.

EQUIVALENT, n. That which is equal in value, weight, dignity or force, with something else. The debtor cannot pay his creditor in money, but he will pay him an equivalent. Damages in money cannot be an equivalent for the loss of a limb.

2. In chemistry, equivalent is the particular weight or quantity of any substance which is necessary to saturate any other with which it can combine. It is ascertained that chemical combinations are definite, that is, the same body always enters into combination in the same weight, or if it can combine with a particular body in more

ER, the termination of many English words, is the Tenthic form of the Latin er; or the one contracted from ver, the other from vir, a man. It denotes an agent, originally of the masculine gender, but now applied to men or things indifferently; as in hater, farmer, heater, grater. At the end of names of places, er signifies a man of the place; Londoner is the same as Londonian.

There is a passage in Herodotus, Melpomene, 110, in which the word ver, vir, a man, is mentioned as used by the Scythians; a fact proving the affinity of the Scythian and the Teutonic nations. Ταυ δὲ Ἀμαζόνων καλεῖται Σκυθία Οὐραπᾶτα. Ἀναίται δὲ τὸ ὄνομα ταύτω κατ' Ἑλλάδα γυναικῶν ἀδελφάντων. Οὐραγ καλεῖται τὸν ἀνάτορον διὰ πᾶσα, πτωίω. "The Scythians call the Amazons Oiurpata, a word which may be rendered, in Greek, menkillers; for aior is the name they give to man, pata signifies to kill." Pata, in the Barman language, signifies to kill; but it is probable that this is really the English beat.

1. To wait for.
The guards,
By me encamp'd on yonder hill, expect
Their motion. Milton.

[This sense, though often used by Gibbon, seems to be obsolescent.]

2. To look for; to have a previous apprehension of something future, whether good or evil; to entertain at least a slight belief that an event will happen. We expect a visit that has been promised. We expect money will be paid at the time it is due, though we are often disappointed. Expect, in its legitimate sense, always refers to a future even. The common phrase, I expect it was, is as vulgar as it is improper.

EXPECTABLE, a. To be expected; that may be expected.

EXPECTANCE, } The act or state of
EXPECTANCY, } <sup>n.</sup> expecting; expectation. Milton. Shak.

2. Something expected.

3. Hope; a looking for with pleasure. Shak.

EXPECTANCY, n. In law, a state of waiting or suspension. An estate in expectancy is one which is to take effect or commence after the determination of another estate. Estates of this kind are remainders and reversions. A remainder, or estate in remainder, is one which is limited to take effect and be enjoyed after another estate is determined. Thus when a grant of land is made to A for twenty years, and after the determination of that term, to B and his heirs forever; A is tenant for years, remainder to B in fee. In this case, the estate of B is in expectancy, that is, waiting for the determination of the estate for years. A reversion is the residue of an estate left in the grantor, to commence in possession after the determination of a particular estate granted out by him. As when A leases an estate to B for twenty years; after the determination of that period, the estate reverts to the lessor, but during the term the estate of the lessor is in expectancy. Blackstone.

EXPECTANT, a. Waiting; looking for. Swift.

EXPECTATION, n. [L. expectatio.] The act of expecting or looking forward to a future event with at least some reason to believe the event will happen. Expectation differs from hope. Hope originates in desire, and may exist with little or no ground of belief that the desired event will arrive. Expectation is founded on some reasons which render the event probable. Hope is directed to some good; expectation is directed to good or evil.

The same weakness of mind which indulges absurd expectations, produces petulance in disappointment. Irving.

2. The state of expecting, either with hope or fear.

3. Prospect of good to come.

My soul, wait thou only on God, for my expectation is from him. Ps. lxi.

4. The object of expectation; the expected Messiah. Milton.

5. A state or qualities in a person which excite expectations in others of some future excellence; as a youth of expectation. Stdney. Otway.

We now more generally say, a youth of promise.

6. In chances, expectation is applied to contingent events, and is reducible to computation. A sum of money in expectation, when an event happens, has a determinate value before that event happens. If the chances of receiving or not receiving a hundred dollars, when an event arrives, are equal; then, before the arrival of the event, the expectation is worth half the money. Encyc.

In the Greek Lexicon of Hederic it is said, the primitive signification of the verb is to bind and draw or lead, as πισθω signifies a rope or cable, as does πισθω. But this remark is a little incorrect. The sense of the verb, from which that of rope and binding is derived, is to strain, to draw, and thus to bind or make fast. A rope or cable is that which makes fast. Qu. Heb. Ch. Syr. Sam. 702. Chas. Bt. No. 16.]

See Class Bl. No. 18. 28. 43. 49. 52. Fall coincides exactly with the Semicitic פָּלַל Heb. Ch. Syr. and Sam. to fall. Fall agrees better with the Heb. פָּלַל and פָּלַל, but these words may have had one primitive root, the sense of which was to move, to recede, to pass. As these words are unquestionably the same in the Semicitic and Japhetic languages, they afford decisive evidence that the l or first letter of the Semicitic words is a prefix. The Chaldee sense of פָּלַל is to defile, to make foul. See Foul. The same verb in Ar. فَلَّ signifies to shoot, to drive or throw an arrow, Gr. βαλλω.]
